MINI PROJECT

YOLO-WTB: Wind Turbine Blade Damage Detection Using Improved YOLOv12

Technologies: Python, YOLOv12, OpenCV, Deep Learning, Computer Vision, Drone Imagery

- Developed an intelligent blade inspection system to detect small damages such as cracks, erosion, and corrosion in wind turbine blades using aerial drone images.

- Implemented an improved YOLOv12 deep learning model for accurate small-object detection in complex aerial imagery captured from different angles and environmental conditions.
- Applied image preprocessing, data augmentation techniques (flipping, rotation, mosaic), and annotation tools such as LabelImg/CVAT to improve model performance.
- Evaluated the model using performance metrics including mAP, Precision, and Recall, achieving reliable defect detection with reduced false positives and negatives.
- Enabled automated damage identification by generating bounding boxes and confidence scores, helping maintenance teams quickly locate affected areas.
- Designed the system for real-time and batch inference using optimized deployment formats such as ONNX and TensorRT.
- Improved maintenance efficiency, reduced inspection costs, minimized turbine downtime, and enhanced operational safety through proactive damage detection.
